“ The world is without one of its classics. A real man who never backed down and got stuff done. Even if it meant painting his car with a roller. And I'll never again see anything like the homemade 'level' he made.

Ty and I are both so sorry we can't be there to share in the celebration of Angelo's life. Your dad will be missed very much, and we will never forget that Christmas (or maybe it was Thanksgiving or Easter) when he told us about his hunting story with the deer. We laughed so hard. The thing that made whatever come out of Angelo's mouth hilarious, was his right to not filter himself and just tell it like it is, cuss words and all.

I had so much respect for him as a man and a father and hero to my best friend.

Ang, your dad was truly one of a kind and no one will ever come close to the man he was. Even though he was serious and sometimes a little scary, his sense of humor was always showing us that he had a soft heart under all that rough surface and cared.

You are genuinely loved and the greatest daughter a father could ever ask for. I know how much of an impact a father like Angelo had on your life to make you the most genuine, kind-hearted, thoughtful woman you are today. I see it in Dylan and what's-his-face, just kidding Justin, and I thank Angelo for that. I know he so proud of you, and will continue to be as he watches over you.

Rest easy now Angelo. It was a blessing to have known you.

*Love,
Liza & Ty*

“ I lived accross the street from Angelo. He was such a great person to know. My husband and him got along great. No matter what was asked from him, he always helped out with handy work around my house. When we moved to Malton he build us a block wall in my backyard. When my husband passed in 2016, he and Angie came for the viewing. He had a heart of gold, and loved his garden, he was a great father, I was blessed for knowing him.

“ I so regret that I didn't get to visit Angelo this month. A couple of years ago, I happened to be driving near Northcliffe and thought why not drop in to visit Angelo. I didn't get an answer when I knocked on his door so I walked around to the back.

I knocked on the back door and heard his voice from a distance, shouting, "who's there?" It's not a big yard and I didn't see him so I asked "where are you?" I heard some shuffling.

Can you believe (and this was one of his favourite expressions, LOL) I backed away from the door and looked up, and saw he was standing on the roof! Bruta Raca! I called up... Get down from there!

If this wasn't crazy enough, it was in January! It was freezing out!

He came down and invited me in. He said he was just checking the condition of the roof. LOL

We had a good visit and it was nice to be in that familiar house. Angelo was a saver and didn't see the need to replace or change something that still worked... like the broom with about 2 inches of straw left on it. He proudly told me he was not drinking and taking better care of himself. And since he stopped working, he most enjoyed his visits from Angie and Derek, showing me some things they had given him for Christmas. He still had that sparkle in his eye when he talked about his kids.

From the early 70's Angelo was welcomed into our family and even with his gruff way, he fit right in. He taught us all a few words in Italian... I just can't repeat them here.

When I bought a house and discovered termites, he was right there rebuilding the back room. Angelo was the master of his craft. He could lift a block from the top with one hand and trowled in the cement with the other and bam... next block.

He was a hard working man with a good heart. He was my brother-in-law.

My dad did some crazy things like climb on the roof in January with no one watching just to see what was going on up there and yes the barely there broom and the weed picker made with a fork. He was definitely a MacGyver of his own kind! So sorry you didn't get a chance to see him one last time. May he live on in your memories like he will in mine. ❤️

“ My deepest sympathies to Angie, Derek and family in the loss of father, uncle, and brother. He was a determined man and tried his best for his children. He never gave up even during difficult times. I am blessed he saved some time to see me during his last days here. Graziec Zio.
